

Jeff Briand, Senior Vice President of International Trip Support

Jeff Briand has 31 years of experience in business aviation and provides strategic leadership to Colt International as the organization's Senior Vice President of International Trip Support. In addition to overseeing the daily operations of his division, he focuses on expanding Colt's worldwide ground handling and vendor network and creating internal systems and online tools.

Upon joining Colt in 2011, Jeff implemented a master plan to develop an automated trip planning system for internal and external use. It is complete with robust databases and the integration of Colt's online tools, such as eFuel and Trip View. He is currently overseeing the development and rollout of OFP, the customer-facing side of Colt's innovative online flight planning technology.

During Jeff's career in business aviation, his roles in management and leadership have contributed to his department earning the title of Best International Trip Planning more than 10 times in the annual Pro Pilot PRASE Survey.

He has more than two decades of business and leadership experience in mid- and upper-level management positions and has honed his skills through Harvard Business School's intensive Advanced Management Program and a mid-level management program at the University of Houston's Center for Executive Development.
